

Christ – the Saviour and Life

By Sebastien Kappen

I. Christ at the Boat

Christ is among the fishermen. I am in Kerala, and I am working among the poor.

II. Christ as a Young Man

Inspirational, all the drama. Sirohi tells me, he was a very dramatic young man, busy in a room and acting. He even spent time listening to Bacchanian music in the mornings and evenings. Once he was so alone, he cried, and was moving in his bed.

III. Christ in our times – Redemption

Christ will resurrect, he has done that many times, he needs no medicine, he is only a Spirit, in that Hegelian sense. He believes in Spirit doctoring, like what is our happiness, and how that low health is low spirit as I see across the poor, and even among the intellectuals and young women in the world. High spirit is high health.

IV. Persistence, Education – and Sexual Liberation, even Poverty Rights and Freedoms – Liberation Theology

What do we live for. This question happens to bother me. Without Christ, and his young followers, there would be only a television, and low pay. I imagine life is more idealist, something of Christ's youth, his drama, and even his love for philosophy. Young women should fall in love. We should as well, the priests. And then educate and teach the poor, or protest. Or best as Sirohi argues he will – a life spent reading with women.
